The African Nations Championship (CHAN) has kicked off in Algeria, initially scheduled for 2022 but pushed forward to January 13th to February 4th this year. This competition serves as a platform for showcasing homegrown talent from the continent, with only players who ply their trade on the African continent eligible to participate. This setup allows lesser-known players to gain global recognition and stars from domestic leagues to showcase their skills. In the previous edition (2022), teams competed in five groups during the initial stage, with two groups of four teams and three of three. The late withdrawal of champions Morocco resulted in Group C having only three teams instead of the original four. Quarterfinals began on January 27th, followed by semifinals on January 31st, and the final on February 4th. Currently, the CHAN 2022 tournament standings are as follows: • CHANSstan the man chan (Noah) - Elder • RANKSbambam (Jason) jr - Droplet Daddy (Mark) - Elder • JUNIORchilly (Cam Hunt) - Droplet ELDERfanta (Britney) - Droplet LEADER wasabi (Tim) - Leader • MASTERchocky (Tobias) - Masterjackie (Charlie) - Mastertarzan (Robbie) - Mastersexy (Jack) - Elder The evolution of internet forums like 4chan and their spin-offs has led to the proliferation of niche communities. These sites often specialize in specific topics, such as Meganekko or Lolicon-themed content. Despite attempts to enforce rules, some users still post dodgy or highly illegal material for the sake of subverting these regulations. A common trait among many imageboard sites is their adoption of a distinctive layout inspired by 2ch's design. This typically includes a sidebar listing boards and site content on the opposite side. Many boards also share similarities with 2ch, such as using specific URL themes or setup configurations like /v/, /m/, and /tg/. Some notable imageboards include The Overchan V.2, which maintains an extensive list of English-language imageboards; Futaba Channel; and 4chan, known for hosting a wide range of boards covering various subjects, including the infamous /b/ board. The latter has become a starting point for many memes across the internet. Additionally, there are spin-offs like 7chan and 99chan, which have their own dedicated communities. /b/ board is not the entirety of 4chan, and it lacks real rules, allowing users to post various content including porn and discussions that can be described as random. The /tg/ (traditional games) board often features creative topics such as games development, paladin vs lich rap battles, and even entire fantasy settings. The /tg/ community is known for its unique atmosphere, with a mix of 40k fanatics and writers. It's also home to a surprising amount of quality content, including fanfics, written by the "writefags", which range from rewrites of popular stories to completely new settings. Notable works on /tg/ include Adeptus Evangelion, a Neon Genesis Evangelion RPG, and Dungeons: The Dragoning, a comprehensive system that references various role-playing systems. The community also hosts imageboard quests and has its own wiki. Ecchi is the adult board that deals with softcore porn content, separating it from the hardcore images found on /h. The material can be described as suggestive and cute but still falls under adult content. On the other hand, /an/ focuses mainly on animals and nature, covering topics like pet care and favorite dinosaurs. However, animal cruelty is strictly prohibited, and violators risk being banned. The board /v/ is dedicated to video games, discussing everything from high scores and speed runs to game tips and tricks. A sub-board called /vp/ was created specifically for Pokémon discussions due to its immense popularity on /v/. Another related board is /vg/, which caters to long-term oriented threads focusing on specific video games. The /a/ (Anime and Manga) board shares similarities with /v/, but its focus lies on Japanese animation, manga, and live-action TV shows. Discussions revolve around popular series, upcoming shows, and new anime releases that often outnumber American cartoons. /m/ is a specialized board for mecha anime, games, and TV shows, including Toku discussions due to their reliance on large robots. Interestingly, /m/ also expresses disdain for Showa-era content. Finally, /jp/ (Otaku culture) emerged as a separate entity from the original /a/ board following controversy over Fate/Stay Night, Tsukihime, and Touhou series. The board's direction is often questioned by outsiders, with insiders responding that they don't particularly care for Japan itself. /sci/ serves as a platform for discussing science and math-related topics, offering assistance to those struggling with mathematical problems or interested in the latest scientific breakthroughs. Get stuck with a science project that just won't work out. Meanwhile, home to numerous heated debates between science and religion enthusiasts - no surprise there! /g/ is dedicated to mainstream tech discussions, heavily dominated by desktop computers and audio players, where you'll find endless Windows vs Mac vs Linux threads, as well as trolling and noob-baiting. Expect to see frequent rivalry threads featuring nVidia vs ATI/Intel vs AMD/Android vs iOS, C# vs Java vs Python, and the occasional genuine help thread. On a more positive note, daily programming threads and tech community discussions about jobs in the industry keep this board from going extinct. /lit/ is where you'll find professional storytelling enthusiasts discussing their favorite books. No fanfics or Ayn Rand allowed! You can also expect book recommendations and lively discussions about independent authors like Animal Collective and Neutral Milk Hotel. /mu/ may not be as all-encompassing as its name suggests, but the music community remains friendly and welcoming to discussion of independent bands like Smashing Pumpkins and They Might Be Giants. Modern dubstep and hard rock are generally frowned upon, while alt-rock fans can occasionally be found sharing their favorite albums. /ck/ is where you'll find a mix of delicious recipes, requests for new recipes, and general cooking tips. Just remember: never browse /ck/ on an empty stomach! /d/ (Hentai alternative) is for hentai with themes outside the norm, including girls with penises and monster girls. This category has earned it the name /d/viants/. Although certain forms of extreme content are prohibited, such as bestiality and guro, other types like minotaur-induced arousal are acceptable. The site also hosts boards for Yuri (girls love) and Yaoi (boys love), where "shipping goggles" often converge outside their respective sections. Over time, /u/ has expanded to include Girls Love content, driving away traditional shippers and spawning a spin-off on 8chan. Additional boards cater to distinct interests, such as cute anime (animated only), cute men, anime wallpapers, general wallpapers, paranormal, creepypasta, cosplay, and advice. Other sections like cars, western animation, comic books, and mobile-related discussions are also available. Notably, the /co/ board for Western Animation and Comic Books can become overwhelming when new shows debut. The boards of 4chan were a hotbed of activity, with individual topics spreading throughout the site, drawing ire from various users. A proposal in February 2012 to create an MLP board was initially dismissed, but it wasn't until fans voiced concerns that Moot decided to create /mlp/ (Pony) instead. Meanwhile, the Photography board, /p/, stood out for its unique blend of disdain for hipsters and post-processing, paired with a passion for vintage camera equipment and Photoshop experts. The board was infamous for its flame wars over camera gear and photographic styles, but users also showcased their image retouching skills or engaged in humorous mocking. Other notable boards included /n/ (transportation), which focused on cycling, trains, planes, and occasionally getting lost; /sp/ (sports), where heated debates raged, often with local fans defending their teams; and /3/ (3dcg), a slow but calm board dedicated to 3D modeling and sculpting. The revival of old boards in October 2011 brought new life to the site, including the creation of /r9k/ (Robot 9001), which shared similarities with /b/ but featured less explicit content. Overall, 4chan's diverse range of boards offered a unique blend of creativity and community, each with its own distinct flavor and flair. All boards on the internet are not created equal. Some are dedicated to serious discussions, while others cater to specific interests or communities. One such platform is 4chan, a popular imageboard that has given rise to various sub-boards focused on different topics. /fg/ (Funny Games) is an umbrella board that covers anything and everything. Unfortunately, it was shut down due to the overwhelming number of threads related to personal relationships and their subsequent devolution into misogynistic complaints. However, the board was revived after its creator, moot, had a change of heart following his criticism of Encyclopedia Dramatica's shutdown. /Pol/ (Politically Incorrect) is another prominent board that focuses on politics, current events, and general debates. Unlike /n/ (News), which primarily dealt with news only, /pol/ covers a broader range of topics. Despite being revived due to user demand during election season, the board has taken a darker turn, often delving into racism, anti-Semitic conspiracy theories, and flame wars between communists, neo-fascists, and far-right capitalists. /hc/ (Hardcore) is an adult-oriented board dedicated to hardcore pornography. It was initially shut down due to spam flooding but was revived on a trial basis. On the other hand, /diy/ (Do-It-Yourself) is a new board focused on do-it-yourself projects, whether it's fixing something or creating something from scratch. In addition to these boards, there are also other platforms like 420chan and Mewch. 420chan was created during one of 4chan's longer downtimes and serves as a site for drug users (although the site itself does not allow direct buying or selling of drugs). It has several non-drug-related boards, including /wooo/, which is dedicated to professional wrestling and is well-known enough that Wrestlecrap considers it their arch-nemesis. More recently, posting on the Netjester board has become a popular pastime. Netjester itself is an English-speaking real-time imageboard originally created for college students but now used by many. It offers various features like a Radio server and Public File Server, as well as great support and user interaction for its users. Mewch aims to keep restrictions minimal. Fchan, a well-known furry imageboard, is often associated with 4chan's "April Fur's Day" prank, but it actually existed before that and arose from the demise of 5chan, which hosted furry-related boards. Fchan set a standard for future furry imageboards by segregating content into separate boards and introducing the concept of "DNP" (Do Not Post) to respect artists' wishes not to share their work. However, Fchan's strict moderation and large DNP list led to the creation of alternative furry imageboards, such as Lulz.net, which is notorious for its extreme NSFW content, including gore pictures, trolling, and vitriolic politics. The site also features a significant amount of anti-furry sentiment. Another notable board is The Goddamned Furry Board, run by former Fchan admin Sage "Goddammit" Freehaven. In the meantime, 5chan has been revived with a post-voting feature inspired by Reddit, although it's currently unavailable. Additionally, there are other imageboards like 55chan from Brazil, which used to attract users who were functionally illiterate and would spam the boards with bland topics and Orkut-related requests. To combat this issue, moderation introduced a filter requiring users to copy a simple sentence using proper capitalization and punctuation without copying and pasting it. The Chan universe is home to numerous imageboards, each with its unique culture and user base. B Rchan and 138chan are essentially the digital equivalents of 7chan and 99chan, respectively. 888chan, once a hub for Project Chanology's activities, has been inactive for nearly two years. This movement, which started on 4chan's /b/ board, is dedicated to countering the Church of Scientology. As a result, users have shifted their focus to Vortex Chan and other platforms like Pooshlmer, which serves as the primary Touhou imageboard and offers Choose Your Own Adventure-style collaborative fan fiction. Desuchan emerged from a popular meme that grew too large for other boards to handle, while Hugachan has become a temporary refuge for regulars of the desu board. Krautchan, Germany's primary imageboard, gained notoriety due to a fabricated post about the Winneden school shooting. It features an /int/ board where users are marked with their country's flag. This has led to the creation of various national imageboards, such as Lóhere (Hungary), Diochan (Italy), Kuvalauta (Finland), and SectaChan (Spain). The Chan universe also includes boards dedicated to specific interests, including Uboachan for Yume Nikki enthusiasts and GUROchan for fans of the guro genre. Idlechannel offers a vast array of content, including forms of pornography not for the faint of heart, alongside non-pornographic material. Notably, its userbase has a diverse and predominantly nice demographic. Idlechannel aggregates content from *chan sites, featuring active forums like Azumanga Daioh/Yotsubato's board and niche anime platforms such as Genshiken. TF2chan caters to Team Fortress 2 enthusiasts, known for shipping content and fan art. B3TA is another British Image Board that hosts message boards, image challenges, quizzes, movies, games, and more. Miserychan started as an offshoot of 4chan's /co/ board but has since become a standalone site with a dedicated userbase. Ponychan, on the other hand, focuses exclusively on My Little Pony Friendship Is Magic and is known for being entirely worksafe. Its users have formed a strong community, even forming spin-off sites like FIMchan and Stevenchan. Another notable imageboard is 99chan, which boasts an extensive variety of boards but tends to be strict with its posting guidelines, banning users who post certain types of content. MikuChan is dedicated to Hatsune Miku and other VOCALOID characters, offering separate forums for various kinks. Lastly, RateitStar.com serves as a platform for both image and text-based content. To explore new and exciting content without worrying about work safety, unlike many other boards listed here. 1chan.net stands out for its focus on trains and railfans, particularly foamer enthusiasts. SFW (safe for work). Additionally, AnonTalk, a Swedish imageboard, is discussed, which started as a lolicon board but shifted to include pedophilia. It has been used for planning DDoS attacks on 4chan and faces criticism for its ease of tracking posters. Despite attempts to report the creator and his board, no action was taken. The board is currently down due to planned updates. Other imageboards mentioned include 789chan, focused on technology but notorious for its /cwc/ section about Christian Chandler from Sonichu fame. 8chan, a user-based community with limited power to its creators, was initially shut down in 2018 for promoting extreme speech. It revived as 8kun and eventually closed again in 2019, prompting the creation of 8chan.moe in 2018. Lastly, the article touches on Jackie Chan's film titles and their confusing naming conventions, particularly regarding the Operation Condor series and Police Story franchise. However, it concludes that you can't go wrong with a random Jackie Chan movie from the '80s, as most are excellent. Get ready to experience the thrill of Jackie Chan's action-packed movies! From dodging heavy objects at the last second to performing death-defying stunts, Chan has left audiences on the edge of their seats for decades. And let's not forget his buddy action/comedies with Owen Wilson and Chris Tucker - a franchise that still has fans hoping for more. As we look back at Chan's most iconic films, it's clear that he was a driving force behind Rotten Tomatoes' creation. Who knew that searching for reviews of First Strike and Who Am I? would inspire the site's founder? After a string of big-budget Hollywood flops, Chan refocused on his roots in China, exploring more dramatic roles as a producer, director, and actor. But let's not forget his Tomatometer-topping films! Here are Jackie Chan's top-ranked movies: 1. Supercop (1992) - 93% 2. Crime Story (1993) - 93% 3. Project A (1983) - 77% 4. Who Am I? (1998) - 67% And the list goes on... From Rush Hour to Vanguard, Chan's films have left their mark on the action-comedy genre. So sit back, relax, and enjoy the ride with Jackie Chan's most iconic movies!
